Ask the Expert:

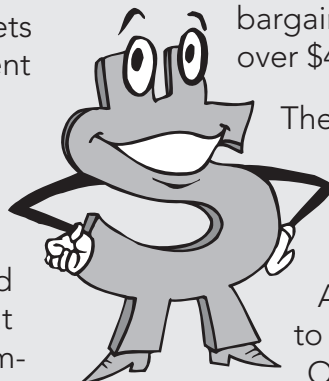

My health insurance (or Medicare/Medicaid) has paid medical bills related to my injury. Do I have to pay them back out of my settlement? (And if the bills are really high, will I end up with nothing?)

ANSWER:

We have to deal with this issue, but it's often not as bad as you think.

We help clients bargain down the payments they have to make to health insurance or Medicare/Medicaid on a daily basis! This lets the client keep more of their settlement money. (We will not take a case if we think we can't get you money in your pocket. Otherwise, what would be the point of you doing it?)

Here's an example: A recent client had more than $48,000 in medical bills that were paid by her health insurance company after she was hurt in a car wreck. But there was only $50,000 in auto insurance to cover the claim!

Our client thought that all of the insurance money would go to pay back the medical bills and she would get nothing. But she was thrilled when we bargained down the health insurance carrier from over $48,000 to less than $13,000!

The client got a good settlement in her pocket. She told us later that she almost never called us in the first place, because she thought it was impossible.

At the Frank Jenkins Law Office, we work hard to put the money from a case in your pocket. Otherwise, what the heck is the point? ■
